Dear David,

Do you have homeschooled children who are interested in taking daytime fencing classes? Fencing is a complex art. It requires stamina, core strength, fine motor skills, rapid reflexes, and keen mental abilities to study and outwit opponents. In fact, fencing is often referred to as "physical chess." Students will find that fencing is something they can do for life, offering health benefits and challenges long after most sports have become difficult to continue.

The CT High School Fencing Championships, held annually in February or March by the High School Fencing Association of CT, clearly states in the rules adopted by the HSFA, that CT homeschooled children are eligible to participate in the tournament. The high schools in the eastern part of CT have very few fencing programs. The homeschool community, a large contributor of fencing students in other states, has been largely absent in fencing in our region.

If you have an interest in fencing, a class has been proposed on Monday and Wednesday mornings from 9:00-10:30 if 4 or more students enroll. Please contact Drew Page, the owner and instructor of the Sword in the Scroll Fencing Academy at 860-268-6774.

Thanks and God bless you!
